As a parent, I hope that the upcoming birth of my kids will allow me to continue with my reviews. In the meantime, I thank Joseph Michael Finn of Memory Alpha for allowing me to use the image of the bald man from the HYDRA stock image he created, complete with a short-haired version that matches his head. I hope there aren't any copyright violations involved. ? (See the bottom of this review for a link to the Bittorrent of the image.) Better yet, I hope my children will one day allow me to create a family photo archive. Perhaps when they're old enough, they will help me review new versions of Photoshop along with other exciting software like APPs, iOS apps, and other components of the XR ecosystem. I'll allow myself to make one more appeal. While it would be great if all mainstream ADOBE applications released updates as Lightroom does, I wish it were possible to pay ADOBE to update any applications, especially other Adobe applications. If not Lightroom, what is? And what about GODOCS, ARTSTORM, and other very popular applications? As easy as? Although the good news are that 64-bit support is being created for Windows 8.1, some of Adobe's features simply aren't compatible with Macs . While Photoshop will be on the Mac App Store, the caveat is that it won't be updated in the same way by Adobe but instead will be "held to schedule and other commitments." I understand this status quo, but I wish that users could pay a penny or two to protect from the hundreds of dollars that come from supporting a Mac version of Photoshop.
